What do I need to know?

Why do people come for Counselling?

What can I expect from my Student Counsellor?

Many people seek Counselling as they are experiencing symptoms of distress that are causing difficulties in their study, work, relationships, ability to concentrate or just life in general. Often we try other ways of coping with that distress (e.g. alcohol, drugs, risky behaviour) that are often unhelpful and can exacerbate our problems and issues.

Sometimes we have a reason for our distress. It can be an experience or a traumatic or significant life event (e.g. bereavement, accident, end of a relationship) or, it may be a situation that is difficult to manage and is getting out of control. Sometimes we cannot express or find a reason for our distress and this often increases our anxiety.

How Can Counselling help?

Many people experience an improvement in their psychological wellbeing after talking through their problems with a counsellor. The Counselling you will be offered is 'Person Centred'. This type of Counselling was developed by American Psychologist, Carl Rogers, in the 1940's. At it's core is the belief that by providing the right conditions in which to explore feelings, a client (you) is capable of growth, change and increased self-awareness.

During the sessions provided, you will not be given advice or be 'told' what to do by the Counsellor. You will be allocated up to 6 sessions, with each session being 50 minutes long. You may find that you need fewer sessions, or more, and this decision will be mutually agreed with the Counsellor.

Counselling usually takes place on campus and is face to face however, telephone and online options are available. You will have a dedicated time slot allocated to you for the duration of your therapy and your Counsellor will call or meet with you at that agreed time each week for your session.

You should feel valued and have equal standing in the relationship. We recognise you are the expert in your own life and have control over the session content. You will be respected as the unique person you are with your own life experience which the counsellor will endeavour to understand. We will listen deeply, without judgement, as you explore the experience and issues that have been troubling you. Through this process, as you increase in self-awareness and self-acceptance, you will find ways to better deal with your situation.

What do we expect from you?

Just as you will be valued by the Student Counsellor, it is important that you understand your commitment to the process. You can show this by making yourself available at your session time and when you cannot make your session, for whatever reason, giving as much notice as possible in order that the time can be allocated for other uses.

The hard part.

Very often, we experience difficulties in life because we supress distressing feelings and emotions and refuse to talk about them. The Counselling process encourages you to talk openly about these things and this can be very painful and sometimes frightening. The Student Counsellor will support you and keep you safe by exploring these issues at your pace.
